Quitting is hard

If you want to quit smoking, you're not alone.

- Most smokers want to quit, but quitting is hard.
- It's not a matter of "will power." And it's not just a bad habit.
- It's an addiction that can be treated.
- What does help is medicine and coaching from someone who knows about quitting.
- But, medicines are expensive.
- The good news is that Medicaid (and BadgerCare Plus and SeniorCare) pays for most medicines.

Talk with your doctor about quitting and getting medicines to help you quit.

Coaching helps

What is coaching?

- Coaches can tell you how to avoid the things that make you want to smoke (like your first cup of coffee in the morning).
- Coaches at the Wisconsin Tobacco Quit Line know how to help you be successful in quitting.
- They will call you with support on days that you choose, like the day you quit.
- Or, you can call them when you are stressed out about quitting.
- The Quit Line also has lists of local programs that can help you.

Call the Quit Line at
1-800-QUIT-NOW.
It's free and confidential.

You can afford to quit smoking... Medicaid covers it.

"This was eye opening..."

"The Power of Money class was eye opening. With the knowledge I gained, in the last 18 months, I started an emergency savings account, maintained a put and take savings account, paid off my credit card, paid off one student loan and paid my bills on time without worry every month.

Having a handle on my finances allowed me to jump at some incredible opportunities guilt free, including traveling to Kentucky, San Francisco and Germany.

Thank you for the guidance you shared. It dramatically improved my life."
